Charleston Sanitary Rates (CSD) Increase to $73 on August 1st

The Charleston Sanitary District (CSD) will be implementing a sewer rate increase effective July 1, 2017. The CSD Board of Directors voted to raise the sewer rates at their June 2017 Board meeting. The monthly rate will increase from the current $71 to a new $73. CIHA was notified of this rate increase on June 19, 2017.

Because of the short notice given by CSD, CIHA will be covering the $2 increase per household for July.

The new $73 CSD rate will take effect August 1, 2017.

Any questions or concerns should be addressed directly to the Charleston Sanitary District located at 63365 Boat Basin Road in Charleston or by phone at 541-888-3911.

Annual Kilkich Community - Wide Garage Sale in August

The annual Kilkich communitywide garage sale will be held on Saturday August 12th and Sunday, August 13th.

Kilkich residents are encouraged to host their own yard sale during these two days; this is a fantastic opportunity to sell items you no longer need, want, or use.

The community-wide garage sale usually draws a large crowd of shoppers. Expect heavy foot and vehicle traffic during the entire event. The sale will be advertised in local newspapers and media; a large directional banner will be hung at the entrance to Tribal Lands.

The garage sale will begin at 9:00 a.m. both days - rain or shine. Expect early morning bargain hunters each day.

The Kilkich Residents Association (KRA) will hold a drawing again this year for all homes actively participating in the garage sale.

Two winning tickets will be drawn on Monday, August 14th at the KRA Board meeting; each winner will receive a $25 gift card.

Each day of the garage sale, a KRA member, or representative, will visit each residence

Ancestral Burns - Traditional Land Management by Oregon Tribes

The Tribe's Natural Resources department recently contacted the library for references on how Coquille ancestors managed their homelands. The research is related to the ongoing work the Natural Resources performs when managing the Coquille Forest, located in eastern Coos County, and the Sek-wet-se Forest, located in Curry County along the Smith River.

The library was more than happy to oblige. In fact, we were able to locate several books and reports with information on traditional land management practices. Controlled burning is referenced many times. Fire, when managed responsibly, was the primary method by native peoples for clearing undergrowth to encourage food plants (like blackberries), cultivate traditional tobacco, prevent devastating larger fires, and promote the growth of plants used for basketry.

Dr. Mark Tveskov, who has worked with the Coquille for many years, describes the traditional use of fire in his archaeology report on Ni-les'tun (People of the ...). This site is located near Bandon and is part of an ongoing marsh restoration project. In the report, Tveskov states...

"The area around the Coquille River estuary, like many regions of North America, was managed by the Native people who lived there. They routinely burned the landscape in order to foster the production of acorns and other plant food. The practice of landscape burning served to prevent the encroachment of forests into oak savannas and prairies, foster the growth of browse (define) for deer and elk, and also to reduce the scale and effect of naturally occurring fires by reducing the fuel on the forest floor." - Tveskov, Mark A. (2007), Ni-Les 'Tun Archaeology: The Bussman, Blue Barn and Old Town Bandon Sites, pp. 8; Southern Oregon University.

In a separate report, The Hayes Site, Tveskov describes a former village site near Powers as located next to an oak prairie that local residents created and maintained through controlled burning.

In another resource, Growing Up Indian: An Emic Perspective, Coquille Tribal member George B. Wasson describes how controlled fire was used by native peoples to promote the growth of plants used for making traditional baskets.

"Certain basketry materials such as bear grass and hazel required burning off a year prior to collecting and preparing for weaving. Each fall, people would go to the mountains and set fires in the areas where the best 'grass' and 'sticks' were growing. When they returned the following summer, the bear grass would have grown into fresh clumps ready for harvesting." – Wasson, George B. (2001), Growing Up Indian: An Emic Perspective, pp. 114-115; University of Oregon.

Finally, Coos Tribal member Patty

Whereat-Philips has written several papers on how southwest Oregon native peoples cultivated traditional tobacco. The tobacco grown locally was Nicotiana quadrivalvis, which is different than the tobacco used in cigarettes. The native tobacco was often mixed with Kinnik-Kinnik leaves when smoked. The following passage suggests that controlled burning was a technique used by Coos and Coquille ancestors to optimize growing conditions for Nicotiana quadrivalvis.

"The Coos Bay village of Wu'alach (on a bluff on the lower bay) and Sand Point (a point of sand in the bay below the town of Empire, where the remains of a smokestack now stand) were also noticed by Coos informants as tobacco growing areas. All of the Native informants agreed that tobacco was actively cultivated, and the methods seem to differ only slightly amongst different tribes. Among the Lower Umpqua, Coos, and Coquille, seeds were scattered in a burned over area. and brush fences erected around the plot to keep out the wind." - Whereat-Phillips, Patty; Tobacco: Indigenous Practices and Uses on the Southern Oregon Coast, Changing Landscapes: "Telling Our Stories"; pp. 17-24, Coquille Indian Tribe.
