Kilkich Community Garden Beds Available for the 2013 Summer Gardening Season

Spring has arrived, and for those of you who enjoy gardening, it is time to start planning your gardens.

If you are interested in planting a vegetable garden this year, there are a few garden beds available in the Kilkich Community Garden. The beds will be assigned on a first-come, first-served basis. There are a few conditions that Kilkich

2012 Kilkich Community Garden

Community Gardeners must abide by.

The gardener MUST keep the assigned garden bed weed-free and harvested, as needed, throughout the garden season. The gardener may only harvest from his assigned bed; please do not harvest your neighbor's produce!

There is no charge to use the community garden; the water is on an automatic timer; and the garden beds will be ready for planting by May 1st, weather permitting.

If you are interested in a garden bed, please call the CIHA office by Friday, April 19th at

2012 Kilkich Community Garden

541-888-6501. Again, there are only a few beds available, so please call today to reserve your garden spot.

On a gardening note, some of the successful vegetables grown in the garden last year included artichokes, broccoli, carrots, chives, kale, kohlrabi, lettuce, spinach, squash, and turnips. In general, cool weather crops do well and yield plentiful harvests in this area.

Interesting Gardening Websites

As with any hobby or trade, there are always tips, tricks, shortcuts, and preferences to achieving the end result or goal; gardening is no exception. Many people have their own style, design, theory, and technique. What works for one person, may not work as well for another. Soil, climate, and personal attention all play a role in the outcome of any garden. Here are a few fun gardening websites to check out that may give you some new ideas or perhaps inspire you to contribute your own successful gardening tips to a blog.

Coos Historical and Maritime Museum is an Integral Link in Indian Education, Local History, and Genealogical Resources

During short breaks between my work assignments, I sometimes stare out at the sunshine (or rain) and think of things to write about for the monthly CIHA article. Yes, I really, really do this. This month, I'm going to focus on one topic and add a second one at the end that is completely irrelevant to the first. So here we go.

Coos Historical and Maritime Museum and the 4th Grade Indian Education Program:

For the last seven years, fourth graders in local school districts have participated in the 4th grade Indian Education program. Students and teachers take field trips to the Coos Historical and Maritime Museum and the Tribe's Plankhouse to learn about southwest Oregon tribes, including the Coos and the Coquille. Every school in Coos County, plus some from Douglas and Curry Counties, participates in this program. The Museum's web page talks about the program in detail. The web page also provides extensive information on local history resources, the museum's plans for a new and expanded facility, and information on donating objects and images; including having historical photos scanned so you can keep the original while donating the scan to the museum, if you wish to. Or you can just check out the museum's hours of operation and pay them a visit.

The Museum's web page address is <http://cooshistory.org/index.htm>

Staying with the Coos Historical and Maritime Museum theme, I wanted to share a couple of the links provided on their web page. The museum web page includes two local history timelines: One timeline covers the first known human settlements in this area to 1899; a second timeline goes from 1899 to the present.

Find them online at <http://www.cooshistory.org/coos-historical-maritime-museum-timeline.htm>

Several of the books used to research these timelines are available at the CIT Library. They include A Guide to Oregon South Coast History, and The Coos Bay Region by Nathan Douthit; A Century of Coos and Curry, by Emil Peterson and Alfred Powers (as in Powers, Oregon BTW); Pioneer History of Coos and Curry Counties, OR by Orville Dodge; and She's Tricky Like Coyote: Annie Miner Peterson, an Oregon Coast Indian Woman by Lionel Youst.

Finally, the Museum provides a detailed page of historical and genealogical resources at <http://www.cooshistory.org/coos-historical-maritime-museum-research-aids-genealogical-sources.htm>

The Patron computer is working!

A few weeks ago, the patron computer was not able to open a .PDF document that a patron needed to have on that day. I'm happy to report the problem was fixed with the help from one of our IT (aka computer expert) staff. Documents can again be downloaded, opened, read and printed. Why am I writing this? Because it is an excellent way to remind readers the CIT Library is available to them.

Tax Refund!?!?

Well I'm not getting a tax refund this year, but if I did, I wonder what I'd do with it...Duck football tickets or a staycation at The Mill Casino · Hotel? If you are getting a refund and are trying to think of some practical ways to use it, these concise, yet informative, articles might give you some good ideas. BTW, I'm not getting tickets nor taking any type of vacation soon. Military.com features an article on using your refund to help pay off debt at <http://www.military.com/money/personal-finance/taxes/what-to-do-with-your-tax-refund-if-you-have-debt.html>. While this site, obviously, caters to military service personnel and veterans, the advice applies to all American citizens. U.S. News & World Report has another article focusing on wise ways to spend a tax refund at <http://money.usnews.com/money/blogs/my-money/2013/03/21/10-ways-to-put-your-tax-refund-to-work>.
